"Sir—Prof. Tyndall has, it seems to to me, scarcely sufficiently acknowledged, in his courageous address before the British Association at purpose that a pastor, sufficiently manber of work on the "History of sort of worship, or sufficiently manber of the Intellectual Development of Europe," which, although published by Meesrs. Bell & Daldy in 1864, is yet very little known out of America. Here and there, Prof. Tyndall has acknowledged his obligations to Prof. Draper's book in a foot-note. But the truth is, that he is indebted to it not only for the occasional pertinent quotations from it scattered throughout his address, but for the whole fabric of it, down to the paragraph on Bishop Butler.
